

Hate

They were on different sides of the same war, one by force, the other by choice. Thomas had been forced into an argument that he wanted no part of, while all James wanted was to be treated just as everyone else was. First impressions are important but is everyone as they first seem? James was everything Thomas had been forced to hate, so why was it becoming harder for him to continue living the lie? He begins to find himself drawn to the boy. Not everyone approves though. For some people, hatred is stronger than love.
