They have a great affinity to Caryophyllacee, from which they are chiefly distinguished by their bisepalous calyx, perigynous Btatnens, and transversely dehiscent capsule. Genera eighteen; species 196. Examples: Portulaca, Talinum, Claytonia. J. H. BJ PORTULACA. The typical genuB of Portulacacece. It contains between thirty and forty species, fully two-thirds of which belong to the tropics and subtropcls of the western hemisphere, and the remainder I to tropical Africa, India, Australia, and the Sandwich Islands; while the Common Purslane, P. oleracea, Is naturalised in most warm parts of the world. All are low succulent herbs, with alternate or irregularly opposite flat or nearly cylindrical leaves, often with tufts of bristles in their axils, and the upper ones forming an involucre around the solitary or clustered flowers; the latter being yellow purple or rosecoloured and very ephemeral, expanding only once, and that only in direct sunshine during the forenoon. P. oleracea, the Common Purslane, Is a fitrostrate annual seldom more than six nches high, glabrous, with small oblong wedge-shaped leaves destitute of bristles in their axils, and small stalkless clustered or solitary yellow flowers above the last leaves on the branches. Purslane baa been cultivated from very ancient times, and is now spread over the tropics and both temperate zones. It possesses antiscorbutic properties, but is not much employed in this country, though Its young pin lots are sometimes put in Balads, and the older ones used as a potherb or for pickling, Three varieties, the Common Green, the Golden, and the large-leaved Golden, are grown in gardens. A. SJ POSO. A sort of beer made of the ferm...
